ADMISSION.

THE Lectures commence punctually on the Wednesday nearest the 15th day of October, in each year, and continue until the 15th day of the ensuing April. From the middle of April to the middle of October is vacation. Candidates for graduation are required by the charter to attend at least one full course of lectures, from October to April; and must therefore register their names, with the Dean of the Faculty, before the first day of November, and must be punctual in their daily attendance on the exercises of the College thereafter. If their average actual attendance, from any cause whatever, is less than five months, they cannot be graduated. Gentlemen who desire to enter, subsequent to the first of November, for the whole of the unexpired term, can do so, on payment of a proportionate part of the fees, but they cannot be graduated. No student can enter for any period less than the whole of the unexpired term, nor for any partial course.

Candidates of admission into the College will register their names, and pay the fees to Mr. CURWEN, at his office, in Times Buildings, No. 66 West Third Street. As no degree is granted unless the student passes a satisfactory examination at the close of the term, no particular course of previous study, either academical or legal, nor any examination, nor any license to practice, nor any certificate of age, is required for admission. Gentlemen, who do not purpose attending more than one course of lectures, are advised, but not required, before entering the College, to make themselves familiar with Kent's Commentaries, Smith's Mercantile Law, Adams' Equity, Stephen on Pleading, and the first volume of Greenleaf on Evidence, under the tuition of some competent practicing lawyer. These works are used as text-books in the College, and afford, in a great measure, an outline and guide to the course of study. This preparation is particularly urged upon students who are under age, who will find it, or something equivalent to it, almost indispensable to a profitable attendance on the lectures. Men of more mature minds, with great powers of physical endurance, and accustomed to study, may perhaps, upon less preparation, and by devoting extra hours, keep up with their classmates.

If time allows, the student will find it advantageous, before attending the Lectures, to read, in the order here indicated, Smith on Contracts, Walker's Introduction to American Law, Smith's Mercantile Law, Stephen on Pleading, Gould on Pleading, Williams on Real Property, the first volume of Greenleaf on Evidence, Adams' Equity, Broom's Commentaries, and the portions of Kent and Blackstone which treat of the same topics. After the first perusal, reading by topics will probably be found the most satisfactory method of study. If any of the works here indicated are not accessible to the student, his preceptor can suggest an equivalent.

Gentlemen who design attending two courses of lectures, may advantageously attend their first course at the commencement of their legal studies. If their want of adequate preparation compels them to leave many things half-understood, they still acquire a well-defined outline of the studies which they must pursue during their probation for the Bar, and learn habits of study and investigation, and the mode of handling causes, that will greatly facilitate their private studies in vacation. Gentlemen will find it wise economy to defer coming to the Bar until they are well prepared; and the Faculty advise all students, whose means allow it, to attend two courses of lectures, as many gentlemen now do. The charge for the second course being little more than nominal, the only expense is that of living in the city.

COURSE OF STUDY.

On the first three days of the term, the professors will give an outline of the course of study. The examinations will commence on the first Saturday of the term, and thereafter the class will be regularly and daily examined, in alphabetical order, upon their reading and upon the lectures. The roll is called, and all absentees noted.

The lectures do not follow the order of any particular work, but proceed by topics. The student is expected to read up, after the lecture, in the books or cases which the lecturer directs, and to be ready, by the next examination, to apply his knowledge to any hypothetical case the examiner may put to him. His attainments are thus put to an immediate trial, and his misapprehensions and difficulties removed before they have had time to become real impediments.

At the close of each lecture and examination, the students are desired to ask any questions of the professor that may occur to them, in connection with the topics discussed.

THE MOOT COURTS.

A Moot Court is held once a week, in which cases at law and in equity are orally argued by the students. The pleadings are prepared and the proceedings conducted in the same manner as in actual litigation. Students are also required to prepare written opinions on hypothetical cases, and occasionally to deliver lectures before the class on some legal topic.

The course of instruction being designed to prepare students, who have acquired some knowledge of the elementary books, for the actual duties of the profession, particular attention is given to those practical details on which the books afford little or no information. With this view, the modes of procedure at common law, in equity, and under the code systems, are constantly discussed and contrasted, and students are required to make themselves practically familiar with the forms of writs, motions, pleas, etc., by drafting them on the black-board, in the presence of the class.

In addition to this, the three branches of the Court of Common Pleas, the three branches of the Superior Court of Cincinnati, which proceed under the Code, and the District and Circuit Court of the United States, which proceed at common law, in equity, and in admiralty, are in session almost daily during the course of lectures, and students who desire to see actual practice can resort there daily for that purpose. To enable them to do so, the lectures on three or four days of the week are delivered in the evenings. Gentlemen who desire further insight into practice, can generally obtain situations, gratuitously, during the winter, in the offices of respectable practitioners.

THE LIBRARY

Students will have access, without charge to them, at the expense of the Faculty, to the Law Library of the Cincinnati Bar. This library, having been selected by practitioners, with a view to the actual demands of practice, is particularly well adapted to the wants of advanced students about to come to the Bar. It contains the English, Irish, American, Canadian and Nova Scotian Reports, a large collection of English and American Statutes beside the standard text-books. Considerable additions are annually made to it, as new works are published.

DEGREES.

Students who have attended the full course of lectures, and whose conduct has been unexceptionable, will be examined by the Faculty at the close of the term. If the examination is satisfactory, they will be presented to the committee appointed by the District Court of Hamilton County, for final examination, as candidates for the Bar. If that committee report them qualified for practice, the Corporation will confer the degree of Bachelor of Laws upon them. No one who has matriculated after the first day of November, or whose average attendance is less than five months, or who has been rejected by the committee, can be graduated. This examination is a real one; and no honorary or formal degrees are granted by this College. Graduates must attend in person to receive their degrees, which are conferred on the last day of the term.

The law of Ohio, of April 7, 1856, vol. 53, p. 71, provides, that graduates of Law Colleges in Ohio, having the other legal qualifications, are to be admitted to practice law, without the probation of two years' study required by the law of 1824.

EXPENSES.

The Faculty, being aware that many gentlemen who attend Law Schools rely on their own pecuniary means, have been anxious to afford as accurate an estimate of expenses as possible, and to guard against the too common fault of understating them. The expenses of living in Cincinnati are not greater than those in other cities. They vary a little in different years, according to the price of fuel and provisions. But the necessary expenses need not exceed four dollars a week. Many students spend less than that. There are no rooms in the College suitable for students. They, therefore, find accommodations in boarding-houses. There are hundreds of medical students attending the medical colleges in the city every winter, who certainly live for less than four dollars a week. The Faculty have made inquiries each year of students as to their expenses, and they think that students may rely on from $105 to $175 paying all the expenses of living during the term, except traveling and clothing. There are, of course, always some whose ample means allow them to spend much more than that amount; and, on the other hand, there are some who contrive to live on little more than half that.

The tuition fee, for the first term, is sixty dollars, in advance. For the second term, five dollars, in advance. The fees are to be paid on registering the name. An additional fee of five dollars is charged as a graduation fee, to all who take a degree. The College makes no other charges; nor is there any other expense, by law or custom, imposed on the student. None of those customary expenses which attend an academical education in colleges, are incurred here.

The text-books cost, in Cincinnati, about thirty dollars; in some years, a trifle less; in some, a trifle more.

These items include the whole expense, except traveling and clothing, of attending the College for one term. The expense of attending the second term will be ninety dollars less than this, no expense being incurred, at that term, for books, and the fees being only five dollars.

ATTENDING LAW SCHOOLS.

Inquiries are frequently made of the members of the Faculty, as to the expediency of attending law lectures, and whether a student, upon a stated amount of reading, can graduate at this College.

If a student is in the office of a competent instructor, engaged in active practice, who directs him daily what he shall read; who stimulates his industry and quickens his perceptions by a daily thorough examination; who is ready to explain daily all his difficulties; who requires him intelligently to prepare all the steps of an actual litigation, and does not engross his time in unintelligent, mechanical copying of papers; if the student enjoys the advantages of daily expressing aloud, in his own language, before an intelligent audience, who are pursuing the same studies, the results of his reading, and of hearing others state theirs; if the confusion of an office never distracts his attention, nor its solitude find him dreaming over his books; if the emulation of numbers is no incitement to labor; if the habit of arguing causes promises no advantages; if he has daily access to a well selected library, and is daily told how he can most advantageously use it; if he has daily opportunities of seeing how the legal business of a large commercial city is carried on in the courts: a Law

School will have very few, if any, additional advantages to offer him.

The question as to graduation, it is impossible to answer. Students reading alone, or in offices, have so little opportunity of measuring their real attainments by contact with others, that they often mistake the time spent in reading, or the number of volumes read, for a knowledge of law. No rule of law is learned until the student can put it into practice. The only true theory of a legal education is that which involves a practical training for the duties of the profession. A student who has devoted a year to serious study, in the books above indicated, understanding what he reads, before attending the lectures, ought to be able to graduate. Whether he can depends on himself.

Gentlemen who design attending the College, and who desire more particular information, are requested to address Mr. CURWEN.
